

UP IN THE AIR

How Airlines Can Improve Performance by Engaging Their Employees

BY GREG J. BAMBER, JODY HOFFER GITTELL, THOMAS A. KOCHAN & ANDREW VON NORDENFLYCHT

ISBN: 978-0-8014-4747-1 | 240 pages | AUS$62.00 / US$33.95 / £28.50 hardcover

"This refreshingly readable and persuasive book challenges the emerging orthodoxy that low-cost must mean low staff morale and low customer satisfaction. Drawing on examples from across the world, including 'legacy' airlines and new entrants, the authors analyse the competitive and employment-relations strategies that airlines have adopted."—The Log (British Air Line Pilots' Association)

"The book is intellectually stimulating and a pleasure to read. It asks the right questions and combines thorough empirical research and informed analysis to answer them. The ideas, arguments and empirical analysis presented merit close attention and wide discussion. The authors even offer a road map to success for consumers, employees, and investors. While the book makes a significant contribution to the literature on human resource management and employment relations in the aviation industry, it is also useful as a starting point for future research."—Personnel Review

"Up in the Air tackles the complex external and internal environments of the world's airline industry. The authors are an impressive combination of Australian, European, and U.S. employment relations scholars with significant research expertise in the airline industry. . . . This book is equally valuable in the classroom and the boardroom . . . and it is instructive for successful employment relations strategy in a wide range of industries—particularly those with knowledge workers and/or dispersed frontline decision makers."—Journal of Industrial Relations
